"What in the thunder are you at!" demanded Mr. Dewberry, outside the deor. "Do you mean to let me in to-night?"

"Do be patient," gasped Mrs. D.; all accompanied by ferocious music. "I'm coming as soon as I get out of this sea of water," replied Mr. D.; why the woman must be dreaming yet! Will you wate up!" and he began pounding and knocking again, with redoubled vigor.

"I'm coming, I tell you," acreamed Mrs. D.; and leeling around the wall also put her hand on the handle of the closet door, which, supposing it to be the room door, abe unlocked and opened wide. But as Mr. Dewberry was not in the closet he did not come out of it, and Mrs. D. perceived nothing but inky blackness.
